While one might expect to see evidence of Shaw's Irishness in his three plays set in Ireland – John Bull's Other Island (1904), O'Flaherty, VC (1917), and Tragedy of an Elderly Gentleman (1921) – his Irish perspective is also manifest in his plays set outside of his native country. As I argue in my book, Bernard Shaw's Irish Outlook, Shaw often uses Irish and Irish Diasporic characters to express his Irish outsider perspective regarding the English and, indeed, life.

The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles: A Vision of Judgement is a 1934 play by George Bernard Shaw. The play is a satirical allegory about an attempt to create a utopian society on a Polynesian island that has recently emerged from the sea. The play divided critics. Edmund Wilson described it as Shaw's only "silly play", in which the action seems to purely whimsical. In contrast, Frederick McDowell wrote that Shaw had created "a symbolic fable" to expound his own "deeply felt ideas". The preface
