A child car seat harness should fit snugly across your child's body, with space for two fingers between the harness and the child. Some child car seats have harnesses to act as restraints. For a harness to work well, it needs to fit snugly across your child's body - you should be able to fit just two fingers between the harness and your child's body.

child. A 5-point harness has straps that go over both shoulders and both hips and then buckles at the crotch. The car seat label will tell you the weight and height range of the harness. Check regularly to make sure your child hasn't outgrown it. A seat belt is also a type of harness and is used on older children in booster seats.

Start your child in a rear-facing car seat in the back seat. Rear-face until at least age 2 and until they reach the upper weight and height limits of the seat (even up to age 4). If your child outgrows their car seat before age 2, change to a seat with higher rear-facing weight and height limits. Keep rear-facing as long as possible.
