Which is more fun to drive: an E92 BMW m3 DCT or a manual ...

I've often wondered about the stats around DCT v manual ownership and whether like for like there is any evidence people hang on to their manual E92's longer for this very reason? To me the whole concept of the M3 is "driver involvement", that includes working the manual box around the unique S65 torque characteristics rather than allowing the DCT tech to do it all so much slicker and perfectly for you.

LCI E92 M3 DCT Mineral White/Fox Red & Porsche Cayenne White/Cognac The DCT is better in every aspect, the downshifts are sensational and the changes cant be matched with a manual. I don't see how the slower tech can be more engaging, if driving with paddles or changing gears with the shifter, its the same as a manual to me, just without a clutch!

E92 M3 Differential Cover Problem Areas and Solutions. The manual transmission can handle plenty of torque. We've never heard of a one of these transmissions not being able to take abuse. The DCT transmission does have more components, and more things to go wrong, but failures are rare. Consider either transmission a solid choice.
