In fact, this re-application of "the kings of the earth" follows the apostolic church's practice (which includes John himself, Ac 4:13, 19) of ironic re-application of Ps 2. In Acts 4:26-27 "the kings of the earth" include "both Herod and Pontius Pilate, along with the Gentiles and the peoples of Israel" (Ac 4:26-27) (see discussion of Ac 4 below).

Kings Of The Earth, the latest from neo-Faulknerian Jon Clinch, is a pretty good novel, but it feels oddly inconsequential. The story trots along for nearly 400 pages, then just comes to an end, as though Clinch simply threw up his hands and said, "That's enough story for now!"

Kings of the Earth recalls the finest work of John Gardner, and Bruce Chatwin's On the Black Hill, another exploration of the bonds between brothers that go unspoken but never unexamined. It becomes a story that is not told but lived, a cry from the heart of the heart of the country, in William Gass's phrase, unsentimental but deeply felt, unschooled but never less than lucid.

The phrase I want us to focus on is the phrase, "the ruler of kings on earth." Jesus Christ is "the ruler of kings on earth." This is what John means when he says that Jesus is "King of kings and Lord of lords" (Revelation 17:14; 19:16). Jesus Reigns Over All

Author Jon Clinch employs about a dozen viewpoints and jumps from 1990 back to the thirties when the Proctor brothers' drunken father was still alive. We meet Ruth, their mother; Lester; their nephew Tom; their sister, Donna; their brother-in-law Delroy, who sells milking machines; and perhaps the most humane character in the book, Preston Hatch, the boys' next-door-neighbor, who cares about them and looks after them.
