Lorenzo Lotto | National Galleries of Scotland

Lorenzo Lotto was a very idiosyncratic personality, which was also reflected in his art. He is generally considered to be a painter of the High Renaissance, but always kept his very own style. Although he was influenced by the Venetian school, he spent much of his career in various other northern Italian cities.

Artist: Lorenzo Lotto (c1480-1556) was an artistic oddity, a Venetian who was never really a star in Venice. His style, stressing the figure and subject matter rather colour, is not typically Venetian; he was sneered at by Titian's circle of artists. Lotto found patrons outside Venice, in Treviso and Bergamo, where affluent locals commissioned portraits such as Giovanni Agostino della Torre and ...
