Monolingualism of the Other has many times been viewed as Derridas autobiographical text. He uses his own experience to discuss language through identity, culture, and colonialism. Derrida states identity is being mistaken for identification and he emphasizes that an identity is never given, received, or attained; only the interminable and indefinitely phantasmtic process of identification endures.

In his 1992 The Monolingualism of the Other, Derrida speaks of his "shameful intolerance" for anything but the purity of the French language (as opposed to French contaminated with English words like "le weekend"). Derrida says, "I still do not dare admit this compulsive demand for a purity of language except within boundaries of which I can be sure: this demand is neither ethical, political, nor social.
