In part one of his Personal Narrative, Richard Burton, famed for his fencing and racy translations, dresses up as a Persian and/or Afghan pilgrim and travels from Alexandria to Medina. It's not clear to what extent he fooled anyone -- certainly everyone suspects him of being an infidel -- but he managed to avoid getting stoned, and so left us a delightful account of his journey.

Much of the Personal Narrative of a Pilgrimage to Al-Madinah and Meccah was written while Burton was abroad and the book was seen through the presses by Thomas L. Wolley, who provided a preface in which he explained that the original plan to publish the three volumes together was frustrated by the delayed arrival of the manuscript of the third volume from India. Therefore, the
