The Great Escape is an insider's account by Australian writer Paul Brickhill of the 1944 mass escape from the German prisoner of war camp Stalag Luft III for British and Commonwealth airmen. As a prisoner in the camp, he participated in the escape plan but was debarred from the actual escape 'along with three or four others on grounds of claustrophobia'. [1]

The Great Escape is an interesting artifact of the World War II era. You're probably at least glancingly familiar with this real life account, originally published in the early 50s. Author Paul Brickhill, an Australian airman, spent a few years in a German prisoner of war camp, where he abetted one of the most famous prisoner escapes of the war.

Still, the escape remains one of the great heroic stories of World War II. A native of Melbourne, Brickhill had begun a career as a newspaper rep. From Rosetta Books: Though The Great Escape is a novel, its basic story is true, and the novel's author Paul Brickhill (1916-91) was a participant in it. Brickhill, an Australian, had flown missions against the Germans in Tunisia for the Royal Australian Air Force when he was shot down in 1943.

I recently purchased 'The Great Escape' by Paul Brickhill off here and a great purchase it turned out to be. Now, first thing's first, if you think you are buying a novelisation of the 1963 film of the same name (the front cover of the book being advertised on the site at present would), then think again. This is not the book of the film.

Paul Brickhill mentions his own role in the escape only very briefly in the foreword to the work. A key element of the escape plan, as Brickhill recounts in great detail, was the forging of official papers required for freedom of movement across the Reich. Brickhill led the gang of "stooges" that warned the forgers when camp guards approached.
