The Life Of The Prophet Muhammad (PBUH)

The Prophet Muhammad is often called the founder of Islam, but he is also something of a mystery because there is little concrete biographical information about his life in the Qu ' ran. To learn more about him, you have to look to sira (Arabic for biography) literature. However, many of these works are dated to the 8th or 9th centuries, i.e. about a century or two after his death, so there are still some details missing.

The life of a prophet is a stripping away process. Everything that is of himself will one day have to face the fiery furnace. Oftentimes one will see that they are not received in the regular church setting. Their message may not be received, but they are called to give it anyway. They may find that they are not readily received, even in their own household.

Seerah of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH)—IslamiCity

In truth, The Prophet is a work of such universal appeal that there is little to be gained from speculating on the identity of persons or places represented in it. For Gibran's purpose was a lofty one, and his belief in the 'unity of being', which led him to call for universal fellowship and the unification of the human race, is a message which retains its potency today as do the messages of ...
