The precaution adoption process model (PAPM) is a psychologically focused model that is most useful in describing how a person comes to a new decision, and how that person can take the decision and make it become an action. The concepts of the model were first discussed in 1988, with a formal accepted formulation of the model coming in 1992 (Weinstein and Sandman, 2002).

Such considerations suggest that the adoption of new precautions should be viewed as a dynamic process with many determinants. The framework of a model that is able to accommodate these additional factors is described. This alternative model portrays the precaution adoption process as an orderly sequence of qualitatively different cognitive stages. Data illustrating a few of the suggestions made in the article are presented, and implications for prevention programs are discussed.
