worship words reflect and contribute to the development of our relationship with God. The authors suggest that we ought to attend to (though not necessarily “balance”) four dimensions of worship language: the expressive, aesthetic, instructive, and memorial. Additionally, they argue that those who plan and lead services should ensure

Worship Words: Discipling Language for Faithful Ministry ...
The authors highlight the importance of facilitating authentic expression of a deeper range of emotions to God, including the language of lament which helps us respond to tragedy or pain while continuing to engage God and await God’s response. “ Worship Words” also addresses words in worship that usually escape our attention. Because worship words express our deepest emotions and help us define the foundational relationship of our lives, these are never throwaway words even when we are ...
